Senator Fairbanks Confers With Secretary Hay and the President Regarding the Alaskan Boundary.

The return from Alaska of Senator Fairanks, head of the American section of the to a decisive issue the future of this body, not only as it relates to the Alaskan boundary, but the entire scope of its work. Following extended conferences between Mr. Fairbanks and Secretary Hay, as well as with the President, dispatches have been exchanged between the British and Canadian authorities and those in Washington which are serving to clear up the doubt and confusion which has thus far

Already it is assured practically beyond doubt that the commission will not resume its sessions at Quebec on the 2d of next month, to which time it had adjourned, but that its reassembling will be in the late fall if the negotiations reach such a stage that the continuance of the work a stage that the continuance of the work of the commission seems desirable. Thus far the boundary question appears to be the great stumbling block, for up to the present time all the diplomatic exchanges in Washington, London and Ottawa have failed to bring about an understanding, either temporary or permanent. This lack either temporary or permanent. This lack of agreement has continued so long that those in a position to judge the situation intelligently do not take a very hopeful view of the outlook. While they have not despaired of an adjustment, yet they frankly admit that the negotiations continue to be in a critical state. Senator Fairbanks' return gives the officials here an opportunity to view the boun-dary with an intelligent idea of all the local circumstancese connected with it. He has been over the ground in dispute, has visited the points which are most at issue and has canvassed the sentiment of those more directly concerned. When seen today Mr. Fairbanks would not discuss the future of the commission or any of the international phases of the subject, as he said there would be manifest impropriety in such a course. He talked freely, however, of the general features of his trip, the places he had visited, and of his ob-servations on the marked business revival and prosperity of the west and northwest, through which he had passed.

Extent of His Trip.

"I spent some weeks in Alaska," said he. going up the Lynn canal, and visiting other interesting and important points in that locality, including Dyea, Skaguay, Pyramid harbor and the points near the rich Porcupine country. While not going rich Percupine country. While not going to the Indian village of Kluckawan, of which considerable has appeared of late, I was in the immediate neighborhood, and got a pretty thorough idea of the entire locality, particularly with reference to its bearing on the official questions which have arisen. As to my conclusions from this observation, I do not care to speak, and, in fact, my position compels me to be silent on every matter relating to the official work of the commission. That part of the country is extremely rich, and the recent gold discoveries have given a wonderful impetus to it. On the way back I saw unmistakable signs of the prosperity and revival of industry which the entire Pacific slope is enjoying. There is a hum of industry everywhere, and people are happy dustry everywhere, and people are happy with the satisfactory condition of affairs."

Conferences This Morning. The senator had another conference with Secretary Hay this morning, and also called at the War Department. It is understood that a further talk on the Alaskan question will occur at the White House this afternoon, and that as a result of this and the numerous exchanges which are oc-curring with the British and Canadian par-ties in interest a definite conclusion on most of the points involved will be reached

Ex-Secretary Foster, another member of the commission, has been in town recently to confer with the authorities on what should be done, but he has now returned to his summer home. Mr. Kasson is also in the city, and is taking part in the conferences on the subject to His Wheel. The body of Harry Chadwick, whom Jos A. Hough waylaid and murdered at Clark's Creek, Conn., on Sunday night, was found in the Connecticut river, near the mouth of the creek. Chadwick's head was frightfully battered. One arm was broken. His body was tied with stout twine to his bicycle, on which he was speeding from his affianced's home to his own home in New Britain when he met his rival and his death. Hough has confessed that he tied the body to the bicycle, put them in the boat that was found, blood stained, rowed down the creek to the river and threw body and wheel overboard.

HARRY CHADWICK'S BODY FOUND. Discovered in Connecticut River Tied

Every additional detail of Hough's crime proves it was most deliberate. He had builded hopes because Miss May Smith ex-hibited innocent sympathy with him. He lately lost his wife, a year after their marriage, and soon his mother died. Besides, except on Sunday, when her sweetheart visited her, Miss Smith often went awheel with Hough. His hopes were dashed when he learned that Chadwick and Miss Smith were to be married this autumn.

On Sunday night the two lovers went from the house of the young woman's father to the Baptist Church at Chester. Hough, who boarded with the Smiths, went to the Congregational Church. He was unusually prominent in meeting that night He spoke in meeting on the subject, "A Friend in Need is a Friend Indeed." He walked home with Miss Smith and Chadwick, ate ice cream with them, pre-tended to go to bed, sneaked out, jumped on his wheel and scorched to the lonely place, where he awaited Chadwick's com-Intense feeling against Hough was aroused by his hypocrisy and the premedi-tation of his crime. It was even whispered that he would be lynched. So State Attorney Murdock, Sheriff Brown of the town of Haddam and Coroner Davis decided to take Hough for safekeeping to the strong jail at Haddam.

He seemed to be perfectly unconcerned when the sheriff drove him away from Chester. His head and face were almost covered with bandages, but he will recover from the dangerous wound which he de-clares Chadwick inflicted, although a razor was by him when he was found moaning in his bed.

During the day he was visited by his brother, W. E. Hough of No. 174 Sands street, Brooklyn, who was overwhelmed with grief, but who was received unemotionally. His pastor, the Rev. F. W. Greens of the South Congregational Church, Chester, also visited Hough and prayed with him, moving him to tears.

Miss Smith is still nervously prostrated.

The Work of Horatio Alger.

Horatio Alger, whose death at Natick Mass., was announced in Tuesday's Star, was thirty years ago one of the most popular writers of boys' stories in the country, ranking with Oliver Optic, Mayne Reid and Frank Castleman, Mr. Alger was born in Revere, Mass., January 13, 1834. He was graduated from Harvard in 1852, after which he spent three years in journalism and teaching and another three years (1857-1860) at the Cambridge Theological School paying his way by his contributions to the press. In 1861 he traveled in Europe, and on his return and until 1864 he acted as a private tutor. In 1864 he was ordained as pastor of the Unitarian Church in Brewster, Mass. There he remained for two years, when he went to New York city to years, when he went to New York city to live. He soon became deeply interested in the condition of the street boys of the city. He made the acquaintance of a bootblack and put him into a story entitled "Ragged Dick." The bootblack made Mr. Alger's fortune. The book made a hit among juvenile readers and revealed to Mr. Alger in what direction his taients were strongest. He wrote more than fifty books for boys, and he aimed in every one of them to inculcate some wholesome moral lesson. "Ragged Dick." "Luck and Pluck" and "Tattered Tom" are the most popular of his serials for boys.

Sessions of Anglo-American Commission New York Senator Analyses Criticism of the

Shows That Latter Has Acted Consistently and With Full Knowledge of Simution.

Senator Thomas C. Platt, who is in New York city, last night gave out the following statement on the war in the Philippines: "I purpose herein to answer certain crit-icisms which are being directed at the conduct of the war in the Philippines. I do not refer to the criticisms of those who, in the name of liberty and philanthropy, are advocating a policy of national cowardice and

"But there are other critics who, entirely convinced of our duty and responsibility in the Philippines, are apprehensive lest the government has not appreciated the size of its undertaking. They forget the history of the matter. They forget the limitations of authority from Congress and of good faith to Spain, by which the government has been embarrassed. They are inquiring why General Otis has not had a larger army at his back. They want to know why there was not a sufficient force present in the Island of Luzon to crush the rebellion upon its first appearance. And stirred by the Island of Luzon to crush the rebellion upon its first appearance. And, stirred by sensational newspaper stories and by the recent 'round robin' of the offended correspondents, they are asking whether the situation is even as good as had been reported, whether the government has not allowed itself to be misled, and whether the military force now being enlisted will surely be great enough for the task in hand. These are the inquiries to which I purpose to submit an answer.

Many Sources of Information. "It should be borne in mind, in the first place, that the government's means of information concerning what has occurred in the Philippines are not confined to General Otis. The Navy Department has its agents there. The President is directly represented by Mr. Denby, who was for fourteen years our minister to China, and by Prof. Worcester, who resided in the Philippines for four or five years, and who knows the native character and habits. The Philippines campaign is receiving the President's constant receival attention. pines campaign is receiving the President's constant personal attention. He is in direct cable communication with Manila, and receives daily reports from all sources.

"The possibility of his being misled about the facts in the case is scarcely worth considering. The precise fact as he obtained it, not only from General Otis, but from each of a dozen or more of his official informants is that for a distance of fifty. formants, is that for a distance of fifty miles north of Manila, and of twenty miles south of Manila, and eastward into Laguna province, our armies hold the territory; that the insurgents are scattered beyond our lines in bands of from fifty to 500, their only considerable force consisting of about 4,000 men, who are encamped in northern Pampanga. The southern army of the insurgents, possibly 2,000 strong, is badly demoralized by recent defeats.

"The President's advisers report to him that in a number of cities within the American lines local governments have been formed, which are discharging their functions competently. guna province, our armies hold the terri-

Life of the Revolt.

"The President is advised, and on this point his information comes unanimously from all the able men whose official obligation is to keep the government accurately informed, that the only hope of the insurgents lies in the efforts they are making to convince the people that a change of government is about to occur in the United States favorable to the insurgent cause;

States favorable to the insurgent cause; that there is a general opposition among the American people to the prosecution of the war, and a fixed purpose on the part of the political party about to come into power to withdraw the American army and to organize the government of Aguinaido. **

"It became immediately necessary for our government to define its Philippine policy, but the President was not to be forced into inconsiderate action. As to Cuba and Porto Rico he had made up his mind, and the French ambassador was informed that a treaty of peace could be negotiated on the basis of the surrender of Cuba to us and to the Cuban people, and upon the cession of the Cuban people, and upon the cession of Porto Rico and Guam, and, as for the I'hilippines, the President said that we would take and hold the bay, harber and city of Manila, 'pending the conclusion of the treaty,' and that the treaty should 'determine the control, disposition and government of the Philippines.'

ment of the Philippines.'

"In agreeing to this arrangement as the basis of a peace conference, Spain made it her duty to withdraw her forces from the city of Manila and give room for ours. But the cable from Hongkong was not then in working order, and before the terms of the protocol could be communicated by Spain to her forces and by us to ours a battle had occurred, and at great expense. battle had occurred, and at great expense of blood and treasure we obtained by force what the protocol had peacefully conceded. This did not alter the terms upon which the peace commissioners were instructed to prepare a treaty, but it put a new face on the situation both here and at Manila. • • •

Keeping Faith With Spain.

"Further expeditions of men to the Philippines would have been a plain violation of the terms of the protocol. But if that wholly sufficient reason had been wanting, there was another, and this other involved the most trying and troublesome condition with which the government has had to contend. The President knew better than any one else that peace was assured, and that all his soldiers, not only those who stood ready to go to the Philippines, but the 20,-000 men then there as well, were by law to be mustered out of the service on the in-stant when he made official announcement that the Spanish war was over. "Even had the President been at liberty under the terms of the peace protocol to increase the Philippine army, and even had the men available for service there been ready for transportation there, no wise counselor would have advised sending them there. Indeed, the very thing that brought on the conflict with Aguinaldo was the dis-patch of a small force intended to take the places of those whose terms of enlistment had expired, and who had already been

'From the hour when Congress assembled in December, the President endeavored to draw its attention to the situation in which the government would be left upon the proclamation of peace. In one message he delivered to the Senate the peace treaty In another he warned Congress that as soon as the treaty was ratified and the ratifica-tions exchanged he would be compelled to muster out the troops at Manila. An army bill drawn in conformity with the government's views was already prepared, and was urgently pressed upon Congress. The country will remember the bitter opposition it encountered from the democratic party."

VICTIM OF FAITH CURE. Christian Science Fails to Save John Roy Robertson.

From the New York Herald today. Despite efforts made to avoid publicity, the circumstances surrounding the death of a well-known man while under Christian Science treatment have just come to light in Orange.

John Roy Robertson, once a well-known artist, died on Saturday morning at his home, No. 46 Ridge street, after having been treated by his daughter according to the Christian Science method. His daughter is Miss N. Robertson, first reader in the First Christian Science Church of Orange. Mr. Robertson was seventy-eight years old, and had been ill only about twenty-four hours. A short time before he died Dr. Edgar C. Seibert was sent for. He did not reach the house for nearly an hour, and then Mr. Robertson was dead. The physician refused to grant a death certificate, and County Physician Washington was called in. He diagnosed the disease as gastro enteritis, and, considering that the natro enteritis, and, considering that the pa-tient's life could hardly have been saved by medical attendance, on account of his ex-
